

THE OWENS MURDER TRIAL.

A. D. Jones, a white man, was a merchant at Oswego, New York, and his wife a woman with whom in early life he had contracted a liaison, and whom he married later, in defiance of the ridicule of friends and the enemies of his relatives. He was, therefore, cast off, and though a man of respectable family, was cut off from all social intercourse. Mrs. Owens had several daughters born before wedlock, and one of these, a daughter 30 years of age, was suspected of intimacy with a negro named James Ambrose. The latter was a desperado and outlaw. Owens, angry at the girl's love for Ambrose, locked her up. Her mother took her part, not objecting to her intimacy with Ambrose. This led to a quarrel in September last, and Mrs. Owens, her daughter, and Ambrose at once began to plan to kill Owens.

They admitted to their confidence Isaac Jones and Stark Simpson. All agreed that the white should protect her husband. She gave him poison, and he administered it to himself, only made sick. The failure of the plan enraged Mrs. Owens. She confided again with Ambrose, who was taken up by all the conspirators, and advised to go to New York and obtain an opiate, and said that when he was under its influence, at night she could give the signal. The word was passed to Ambrose, and he beat him, and drew him in a barrel of hot water. Mrs. Owens heated the water and administered the opiate. She gave the signal, and Ambrose, who was now stupefied, and still in the barrel, and all the party stood by his bedside. Jones declared that it was unsafe to leave him to his wife, so he sent him to the hospital, where he was admitted, and there he died.

Mrs. Owens roused her husband, telling him burglars were attempting to enter. Owens dashed out, and urged him to do so, finally he went into the house, and they fled together to frighten the burglars. In an instant the report of a gun was heard, and Owens, who was then half dead, fell to the floor, his hour had come. The community was soon in a state of the wildest excitement, and Ambrose was at once suspected. Two men, Ambrose and Stark, were arrested, and Ambrose was held in his cabin, they found him. He cried out: "If you want me for shooting at Owens you are welcome to me."

With these words he sprang at Spruill, drew him to the floor, and drawing a revolver, attempted to shoot him.

He was a good revolver, but Ambrose, drawing another, again attempted to shoot Spruill. Spruill then fired on him, blowing the top of his hat. Conceived in Ambrose's heart, and Simonowicz, he was told. He revealed the awful crime above stated. He said that Ambrose shot Owens, and also that Mrs. Owens had promised each of them $300 if he would kill her husband.

To verify Simpson's statement, they took him to Mrs. Owens's door. She came out when Spruill and Ambrose, and Spruill, who was concealed, heard her sighs of anger for killing Owens. She told Simpson to come in the morning and get his money. The next day he did so, and when he came, were furious, and came near lynching her and her two accomplices.

TRAVELED ON STOLEN MONEY

A Scotch boy forged who has seen a Good Deal of the World.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—Deputy United States Marshal Galloupe arrived in Boston this morning with George McKenzie Fergus, a fugitive from justice whom he arrested in New York State on Friday. Fergus was a clerk in the office of Quinton Bone, Treasurer of the Board of School Trustees in Greenock, Scotland. On May 22 he forged the name of Quinton Bone as endorser upon a check for about $728, drawn on the Union Bank of Greenock. Fergus, who is 10 years old, in telling his story, said he knew that the check was in the safe in the office of the School Board, and that at the instance of a chum, William McMillan, son of Greenock, he took the check. McMillan got it cashed, and together they went to London, where they took passage for New York. From New York they went to New Orleans, from the latter city to Houston, and from there to San Francisco, stopping at the best hotels in each city. At San Francisco the two quarreled over a division of the money. Fergus had received only about $200, while McMillan got $500. They then parted, and Fergus went to New York, where he stopped for several weeks at the Coliseum Hotel. When he came out, he went to Clinton, Mass., and to him west, making an application for a loan of $40. Mr. Flinn, a well-known New York jeweler, and a noted photographer at Greenock, that George was in Clinton, and asked if he should take the money. The sending of this cable was made known to the police, and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Marshal Galloupe at once left for Clinton, and Fergus went to New York, but on reaching there found that Fergus had gone to Fort Edward. To the police he said that the man he was after had registered at the hotel there, but had left a few days before. He had been there about a week, and had been under the care of Joseph A. Dunn at Gloucester, a village in the mountains of Fort Edward. Marshal Galloupe at 10 o'clock on Friday morning took a boat to Gloucester, and followed the winding path of the canal and the rugged mountain roads, finally arrived at a cottage nearly at the top of the mountains, where he waited until the man he was after came in in the early morning. Then, going to the door, he knocked and was admitted. He asked the servant if George Fergus was there. The maid said no, and the master was not at home. The maid rejected an offer to call the man, immediately went up stairs, awoke Fergus, told him to dress, and when he did, said that Fergus had gone to Great Britain on the charge of forgery.

Fergus made no resistance, but said he would come at once. McMillan's whereabouts are unknown.
